

A close-up, angled photograph of a wooden bench. The focus is on several parallel wooden slats that run diagonally across the frame. The wood has a warm, reddish-brown tone and a visible grain. The slats are connected by a metal frame, which is partially visible. The background is a blurred, textured surface, possibly gravel or a paved area.

Colours have a decisive influence on the impact of a space. Their task is to complement and round off an architectural vision. That is why we offer a broad colour selection to deliver the highest possible creative freedom to adapt to the design of your outside space.

Although we do our best to make sure that the colours displayed on our website and in print are accurate, the actual colours may vary.

To offer our customers the highest possible freedom of design, many of our products can now be ordered in colours that differ from ones shown on our website. In this instance, please allow for slightly longer delivery times.

If you are interested in alternative colours to those shown in this booklet or have your own special colour palette in mind, we will be happy to advise you on availability, delivery times and surcharges.
